Love for Ohio in the Winter

The big news around WOSU this month has nothing to do with fiscal cliffs or debt ceilings.

Rather, it’s an exciting announcement coming February 14th about the renewal of our highly regarded Columbus Neighborhoods project. You might consider that day special for hearts and arrows, but we’re thrilled to be able to continue the bicentennial-inspired documentaries, storytelling sessions, radio specials and outreach efforts focused on this community’s amazing neighborhoods for the next three years.

The following poem has been floating around the Internet for a few years and I couldn’t find an author, but it seemed fitting for this time of year in Ohio (and yes, I know it’s worse in many other northern states). What better month to spend some time in front of the fire watching WOSU TV or relaxing with a book and listening to Classical 101. And perhaps you heard about that book on 89.7 NPR News. Stay warm and thanks so much for your ongoing support of WOSU Public Media!

Ohio Winter Poem

It’s winter in Ohio
And the gentle breezes blow
Seventy miles an hour
At thirty-five below.

Oh how I love Ohio
When the snow’s up to your butt
You take a breath of winter air
And your nose gets frozen shut.

Yes, the weather here is wonderful...
So I guess I’ll hang around
I could never leave Ohio
’Cause I’m frozen to the ground.

Classical 101 Listener Transforms Classical Music into Abstract Paintings

For WOSU Public Media member Hooshang Hemami, classical music is truly the stuff of life.

“It’s part of what I need to live,” Hemami said, “like food, like water.”

Over the last 30-plus years Hemami’s passion for classical music has expressed itself in literally thousands of music-inspired oil paintings.

Hemami had been intrigued by the few recordings of Western classical music he had heard growing up in his native Tehran, Iran. Shortly after moving to the United States in 1958, he had a chance to hear recordings of some of Beethoven’s symphonies. He was hooked.

“I realized that there are treasures in there that I had to explore,” Hemami said.

When Hemami came to Columbus in 1965 as a research associate in engineering at Ohio State University, he found he could also indulge his passion for classical music at the touch of a button by tuning in to WOSU. A year later he joined the OSU engineering faculty, and listening to classical music every day on WOSU gave him an outlet for his intense scientific research. But the more he listened, the more he found he also needed an outlet for the powerful emotions music welled up in him.

“Eventually I realized that music gives me a lot of energy,” Hemami said. “It comes like a flood.”

So in 1980 — the same year WOSU began broadcasting almost round-the-clock classical music on 89.7 FM — Hemami picked up a paintbrush, and for more than three decades his music-inspired energy has come out in a steady stream of paintings. Today, Hemami has thousands of colorful, abstract oil paintings to his credit, most of which were inspired by the music of Mozart, Beethoven and J.S. Bach.

“Mozart brings me in touch with myself, Beethoven is the one that propels me, and of course, I have to live in the real world, and that is Bach,” Hemami said. “My main energy, and what I need for life, comes from those three (composers). That’s why I have to nourish myself every day,” Hemami said.

And Hemami says he still “nourishes” himself musically every day — in the car, at the office and in the painting studio in his garage — by listening to WOSU’s Classical 101 (WOSA).

“I haven’t found anything that could do this for me other than music,” Hemami said. “I feel very blessed that we have had WOSU.”

Hats, Gloves and High Tea

On January 5th, WOSU Public Media hosted a High Tea and Advance Screening inspired by the premiere of the third season of Downton Abbey at The Westin Columbus and the Southern Theatre. Guests were invited to wear costumes that reflected the fashion of the era in which Downton Abbey is set... and they showed up in style on that winter afternoon. Hats, gloves, bowlers, and pearls bedecked the almost 400 people who attended the High Tea. And another 100 fervent Downton Abbey fans joined the High Tea patrons for the free screening of the first hour of the first episode of the new season.

It was a privilege for WOSU Public Media to provide such a unique experience to our PBS viewers and their support helps us to keep programming like Downton Abbey on the air. And the passion and devotion to this British melodrama by local fans was also seen by a national audience: the regal return of this period drama drew a record 7.9 million total viewers, which was nearly double its second season premiere and quadruple the usual average for PBS.

Costume contest winners: Marilyn Harris, Barbara Muller, Kate Wilson & Molly Blevin

89.7 NPR NEWS

Kick-start your day with
The term Breaking News means a major story is happening now and news organizations are covering the story as it happens. Needless to say, covering breaking news is a challenge for a newsroom. Reporters and editors are scrambling to get to the scene, struggling to separate rumor from fact and dashing to get the information on the air in a reasonably coherent fashion.

In recent years the term has been overused. Breaking News used to be reserved for major events: a major disaster, sudden resignation of a major figure, an unexpected announcement. But now cable news networks and local TV stations use Breaking News for just about any unplanned event and use the term long after the story has “broken.” In short, it has become yet another sensational element to commercial TV news.

That’s one reason NPR has been reluctant to embrace breaking news coverage. NPR correctly felt its listeners favored more thoughtful, reflective coverage of major events. So it often left the special breaking news coverage to its commercial cousins, waited for things to settle down and then put the major event in perspective. That worked when NPR was a secondary news source. Listeners would watch the story break on CNN and then turn to NPR to see what it meant.

That’s no longer the case. NPR is a primary news source and as such has begun to increase and improve its breaking news coverage. But don’t look for Robert Siegel and Neal Conan to offer wall-to-wall coverage of the latest Lindsay Lohan court appearance. Over the past year it, and 89.7 NPR News, have offered excellent special live coverage of several events including the school shootings in Connecticut, Mitt Romney’s running mate announcement and the impact of Hurricane Sandy. All Sides with Ann Fisher provided two hours of live coverage of the Supreme Court’s healthcare decision. With these stories, NPR and 89.7 provided the latest details and thoughtful perspective our listeners demand. And the breaking news coverage extends to wosu.org, npr.org and social media platforms.

We at 89.7 NPR News know pre-empts regular programming for special coverage is inconvenient for some listeners. And we know some listeners don’t like special coverage, in particular, coverage of tragic events, so don’t look for 89.7 to pre-empt regular programming often. But when major, serious news breaks, NPR and 89.7 NPR News will be there, doing our best to bring you the latest in developing stories without sensationalizing them.

Q&A with All Sides with Ann Fisher

Senior Producer Michael De Bonis

Michael De Bonis is the latest addition to the 89.7 NPR News team. Michael serves as senior producer for All Sides with Ann Fisher (10am–noon). He researches topics, books guests, and helps prepare Ann for her interviews. Michael is a native of New York, but attended college in St. Louis and worked in public radio in Chicago.

Why did you want to work for All Sides with Ann Fisher?

I wanted a challenging job on a daily public affairs show. I found it.

You moved to Central Ohio from Chicago; what do you think about Columbus?

I’m very impressed with Columbus. I’ve been to some great restaurants and I’m looking forward to exploring more of the city as the weather improves.

What are your favorite All Sides topics?

In general, I like topics with a strong local focus. I’m usually a big fan of science.

What are your favorite public radio programs (other than All Sides, of course)?

The American Sound Celebrates African American Music

Saturdays at 6pm with host Jennifer Hambrick

February is Black History Month, and there’s no better time to showcase the contributions of African American classical composers and performers, and the rich, distinctly African American traditions of ragtime, jazz and blues. The American Sound will feature music by esteemed African American composers Scott Joplin and William Grant Still alongside performances by legendary black soprano Kathleen Battle, the Imani Winds and the electrifying countertenor Joseph Jennings, the founder of the Grammy Award-winning chorus Chanticleer. And on February 23, tune in for a special program of “Blues, Rags and All That Jazz.” Don’t miss Classical 101’s celebration of African American Music on The American Sound Saturdays during February at 6 pm!
Richard II with Derek Jacobi
Derek Jacobi returns to a role he played 30 years ago, coaches actors at the Globe in aspects of the play, reveals why it could have cost Shakespeare his life — and shares some of the extraordinary modern political parallels within the play that still resonate as dictators are deposed. Also featured are notable excerpts from the upcoming Great Performances film adaptation starring Ben Whishaw and Patrick Stewart.

The Revisionaries
Witness an ongoing culture war raging in Texas. The state’s Board of Education has been engaged in a pitched, years-long battle over what belongs (and doesn’t) in public school textbooks. Legislators, educators, parents and students debate the facts and the theories.
